You know how those days go — all morning long, it felt like you were struggling to keep on track with the schedule. Your team is frustrated because they haven’t had their full hour lunch more than one day a week in as long as they can remember.

You walked by the sterilization room 15 minutes ago, and it sure sounded like they were complaining to each other because you said to work in that emergency, and they were struggling to figure out how to pick up their kid from daycare on time. Again.

You want them to enjoy working here, but you have to be able to pay the bills.

You buy new equipment to save money on taxes — of course now you have to pay for it every month — but why does it seem like the harder you work, the further behind you get?

Well, it turns out there actually is — and it’s something that you learned when you were about 5! Do unto others.

While doing that, add exceptional care — esthetic adhesive excellence like you see in the journals. But how?

Well, the answer happens to be the foundation that LVI was built upon — building the excellence in a patient-centered practice. And the programs at LVI have been teaching clinical excellence and communication and business systems for almost 20 years to help doctors do a better job of not only seeing the patient but, more importantly, connecting with them.

Two decades of not only communication but comprehensive diagnosis and clinical excellence. As a result, the doctors at LVI have a statistically higher professional satisfaction and income.

Isn't it time you go find out what they are doing differently? Yes. Yes, it is — and congratulations on the journey you are about to start.
